For a semio-pragmatic approach of media metamorphoses

INTRODUCTION

- Today we are witnessing a multiplication of images in the public space. These images circulate from one medium to another via « transfers ».

- The case study of transfers of the Star Academy broadcast towards the magazines and the Internet enables the illustration of a communication problem affecting both the individual and the society’s structuring around an imagery which is more and more polymorphic.
IMAGES, MEDIAS AND SEMIOTICS
Media metamorphoses

This work lies in the tradition of a scope of information and communication sciences studies about « media metamorphoses » (Jeanneret, Souchier).

- The phenomena of hybridization and contagion are today constituent of the media communication.
- The individual is not only consumer but also producer of images.
- The observation of these media metamorphoses requires to bring into light the meaning contained in the circulation of graphic forms in the mediatic sphere.

In order to observe this phenomenon, a semio-pragmatic approach is therefore necessary.
The semio-pragmatic approach

- Reference to the « social theory of signs » of Peirce
- Eco and the notion of usage: « the sign is (...) perceived according to its origins, and to the effects it has on the persons adressed, the way they use it. »
- A semiotics of visual images
- The body as one of the aspects of the « semiotic substance » (Fontanille)
- Analyze the body in performance as an index of emotion
STAR ACADEMY: A CASE STUDY
Star Academy: presentation

- A real-TV programme of the french channel TF1.
- A programme which trains the candidates to singing and dancing.
- 2 broadcast formats:
  - a daily pre-recorded programme in access prime time;
  - a weekly live public programme in prime-time.
- A programme in which the candidates switch from anonymous status to media star.
- A programme which generates multiple circulation of images.
Why this case study?

- The TV plays a dominating role in the images circulation dynamics.
- The Star Academy broadcast offers an important visibility on the transfers phenomena and the media metamorphoses.
- This semiotic study undergoes a structural observation of transfers and a thought on the appropriation of these images transfers.
The transformations into play in this study

- Questionings about the mediatic sphere structuration facing the proliferation of iterative images.

- Questionings about the links the individual maintain with these images.
THE BODY EXHIBITED
Self-exhibition

- The candidates are voluntary to exhibit themselves.
- Self-exhibition is the exhibition of an « image » which is necessary to obtain the public’s recognition.
- In Star Academy, the self-image is above all a body image.
- The candidates fits social and physical stereotypes and the screen plays a normative showcase role for the body.
The body, an evaluation object

- The body works as a parameter of the consumption offer proposed by the programme.
- The body becomes an evaluation object.
- The body is an index of value, signs setting.
- Le Breton: "Modern narcissism (...) converts the subject into the operator making of his life and his body a screen where signs are favourably put together”.
- The body screening appears as the expression of a social wanting-to-be.
From the « intimate » body to the body « in performance »

The transferred images work both as indexes of a televisual content and as symbols of the programme.

Two body representations

- The intimate body is mostly visible in the daily broadcast, based on the sequence of the candidates’ course days;

- The body in performance is visible in the set weekly broadcast which takes place in public (the «prime»).

THE RE-USING OF BODY IMAGES
The selected images reveal the « public image » of the medium, which positions itself either as promoter or detractor of the programme.

The Internet surfers who appropriate the images are also brought to position themselves according to their ideology.

On the promoters’ side, the body is sublimated.

On the detractors’ side, it is seen in its most trivial dimension.
The sublimated body

- The body images are chosen to offer only the most flattering ones.
- Baudrillard: the body is one of the « multiple signifiers of the social status ».
- The sublimated images are visible in teen magazines, TV magazines, fans’ blogs and the official website of the programme.

Rather close shots are preferred.
The aim: bring emotion

The illustration of a Télé Poche article
The trivial body

- Images spread by the celebrity magazines and satirical websites
- The bodies are chosen as indexes of “loosening one’s grip”, clumsiness (indexes of the body’s « failures »).
- We are witnessing a real demystification of the body of televisual subjects.

Pratices of individual handling of images by “fans”

- The Internet users (particularly the teenagers) play a role in the handling of images that they can reappropriate and reinvest with meanings via different rerouting practices.
- The teen magazines produce images which can be handled as posters or cards to be cut out; these images are focused on increasing the standing of the candidates’ bodies.
- The most visible use of images are those that one can observe on the Internet.
The fans’ blogs which focused on a particular candidate

- The images that are presented there are those which seem to have a deep emotional impact on the fan.
- The blogger acts on the images by the selection he makes and the way he contextualizes them by adding text.
- He is also the creator of new images that he edits by cut-outs and by adding motifs and texts inside the image itself: this is called the “fanart”.

CONCLUSION

The projection of the TV viewer expresses itself through different appropriations and usages of images which take place on the Internet:

- on the institutional plane: the programme’s official website ;
- on the community plane: chat rooms, image sharing websites ;
- on the individual plane: blogs and personal websites.

The body is to be analyzed as an index of an emotion which refers to identification and to the development of TV viewer loyalty.

This approach brings us to examine a visual world undergoing massive changes, combining more and more the control of the body’s image as a visual entity with the « technical » control of the body’s image as a product.
