1. Introduction

This publication contains a collection of proverbs (yanna), two animal tales (maauta) and one legend (heessa), which I recorded during my fieldwork on the Kambaata language 2002-2005. The proverbs were collected by Tessema Handiso in his home village Garba and I wrote them down in the official Kambaata orthography. I recorded the narratives published here on the 28th of May 2003; two of the narratives were told by Tessema Handiso, one by Markos Wedajo. Subsequently, I transcribed the texts and edited them. It was attempted to retain the characteristics of the spoken texts also in their written versions and to publish them in full detail.

The following and many other texts served as the basis for my research on the grammar of the Kambaata language. With this small publication I would like to express my gratitude to many Kambaata speakers in and around Duuraame and Daambooyya, who readily shared many big and smaller pieces of knowledge about their fascinating language with me. Abbihsh galaxxaanne. It is my sincere hope that the present booklet will stimulate the collection and preservation of their rich oral tradition (of which only a tiny bit can be presented here). Furthermore, I hope to encourage Kambaata speakers to write and read in their own language and to put into practice what they are now being taught in the Kambaata classes in schools.

About an hyena and his children

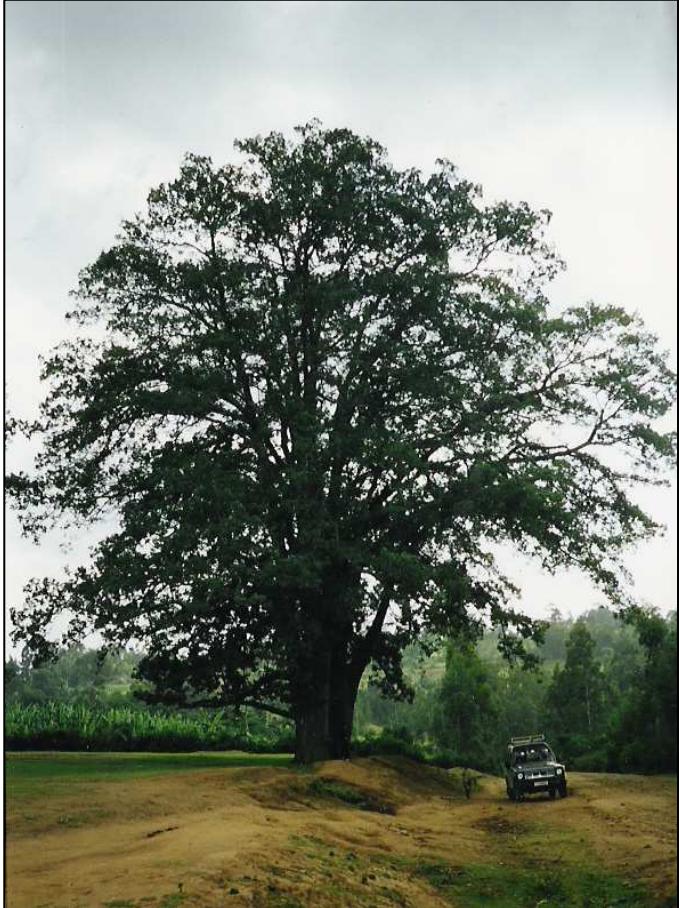

Narrated by Tessema Handiso

ENGLISH SUMMARY: A hyena father and his two sons, Maanjiriilla and Maanziruuxa, went out in look for food. They came across a donkey, which they overpowered in a joint effort. After the donkey had been killed, the hyena father asked his children to stay away from the animal and to hide. He pretended to be concerned that the donkey's owner might come soon, detect what they had done and kill them. However, he himself started eating the donkey. The children watched him and expected that he would call them soon and share with them. But the father kept them waiting for a very long time and he filled his belly with donkey meat. Eventually, the children reminded the father of their cooperation during the hunt and asked for meat. The father, however, ignored them and kept eating. The children became more and more hungry and realising that their father was not ready to share, requested just an ear. But even this was rejected by their father. When he had almost eaten up the whole donkey alone, the owner and other men who assisted in the search for the missing animal approached. The hyena children fled as fast as they could. The father, with his stomach full to the brim and very heavy, was unable to run away and called for help desperately. He pleaded his sons to return but they reminded him that he had even refused to give them the tiniest bit of meat. The owner of the donkey and his helpers speared the hyena father, as soon as they found him squatting beside the donkey's remains.

The morals of the story are as follows: The one that eats alone, will be stabbed alone and die alone. The one that loves his belly will get his belly stabbed.

The one that was rejected will rule.
The one that was refused will inherit.

Narrated by Markos Wedajo and revised by Tessema Handiso

ENGLISH SUMMARY: There were three servants working in the palace of the lion king: a baboon, a dog and a monkey. The baboon and the dog hated the monkey and wanted to get rid of her. Insidiously, they asked the king why he was walking barefooted although the monkey knew how to sew shoes. As expected, the king was upset that he had never heard of this skill of hers and took her to task. The monkey explained that she had not sewed shoes for him because it had been too difficult to get the necessary material. When the king assured that he could provide anything, she said that she needed dog leather and baboon sinews. The king killed the other two servants on the spot. The monkey took the leather to the river to soften it. In the river, she saw her mirror image and an idea came to her mind. She returned to the palace to inform the king that there was someone bigger than him living in the water, someone who had threatened to capture her. In anger, the king rushed to the river, looked into the water and was faced by another lion. Intending to kill his rival, he jumped head first into the water and drowned. The monkey became the new ruler in the palace.

Two mothers and their two children

Narrated by Tessema Handiso

ENGLISH SUMMARY: Two women were living together in one house. Each of the women had a baby. One day, one of the women laid down her child and went to the market. Soon after that, the other women also laid down her child. But whereas the first woman had carefully removed the blanket from her baby's nose and made sure that he could breathe properly, the second one did not take such precaution. Carelessly, she covered her son with the blanket and went to her working place. When she returned home, she found her son dead on his bed. He had suffocated under the blanket. Quickly, the woman exchanged her dead son with the son of the first woman. When the first woman came home she found the corpse on her child's bed and the other woman breastfeeding her (the first woman's) son. The second woman contested that she had exchanged the children and refused to return the healthy baby to the first woman. Finally, the women agreed to call elders to mediate between them. The elders listened to the testimonies attentively. Each woman argued passionately and claimed that the healthy baby were hers but not the other woman's son. Eventually, the elders asked for a knife and announced that they would divide the healthy baby into two equal parts and give each woman her share. The heartless second woman agreed immediately. The first woman, however, the real mother, was shocked, withdrew the charge and begged the elders to give the baby to the other woman. She did not want the baby to be slaughtered and agreed that the baby would be raised by the other woman. From the reaction of the two mothers to their plan the elders could deduce who the real mother was, namely the good-hearted woman, who chose to give up her son rather than to see him die. They returned the baby to his real mother.
