Persians in Egypt

Jean-Luc Fournet

► To cite this version:

Jean-Luc Fournet. Persians in Egypt. Roger S. Bagnall; Kai Brodersen; Craige Brian Champion; Andrew Erskine; Sabine R. Huebner. Encyclopedia of Ancient History, IX, pp.5192-5193, 2013, 10.1002/9781444338386.wbeah07074 . hal-01597506

HAL Id: hal-01597506

<https://hal.science/hal-01597506>

Submitted on 28 Sep 2017

HAL is a multi-disciplinary open access archive for the deposit and dissemination of scientific research documents, whether they are published or not. The documents may come from teaching and research institutions in France or abroad, or from public or private research centers.

L'archive ouverte pluridisciplinaire HAL, est destinée au dépôt et à la diffusion de documents scientifiques de niveau recherche, publiés ou non, émanant des établissements d'enseignement et de recherche français ou étrangers, des laboratoires publics ou privés.

Persians in Egypt

JEAN-LUC FOURNET

Egypt was a rich country, and the Persians had coveted it for more than a millennium. It had been conquered twice by the Achaemenids (525–404 and 343–332 BCE, until Alexander's conquest), but the stable and powerful Ptolemaic kingdom, and then the Roman Empire, kept away Persians from Egypt for much of the Greek, Roman, and Byzantine periods. But the expansionist designs of the Sasanian King Chosroes II Parwēz (590–628), taking advantage of a troubled period on the Byzantine side, allowed Persians under the command of Shahrbaraz to conquer Egypt once again (among other parts of the Near East), for a short period (619–629).

Little is known about this last Persian occupation. Except for some literary sources which recount only the bare facts, it is attested by the documents left by the Persians (written in Pahlavi), and by those of the Greco-Egyptians. The former, often fragmentary and difficult to read, are nearly all of a military nature (lists of provisions for soldiers, orders, itineraries). The latter rarely refer to Persians, and tell us almost nothing about the administration of Egypt and the relationship between the conquerors and the conquered during this period – except for a few allusions to occasional clashes. This relative silence is due not only to the language barrier and the rejection of the Persians by the Greco-Egyptians, but also because the internal situation in Egypt changed little with the Persians who, limiting themselves to a military presence, relied on existing networks and institutions to administer the province. The most obvious trace left by this conquest is probably the fashion for Iranian-patterned fabrics.

SEE ALSO: Achaemenid Dynasty; Chosroes II; Herakleios, emperor; Persian, Persians; Sasanians.

REFERENCES AND SUGGESTED READINGS

- Altheim-Stiehl, R. (1991) "Wurde Alexandria im Juni 619 n. Chr. durch die Perser erobert? Bemerkungen zur zeitlichen Bestimmung der sāsānidischen Besetzung Ägyptens unter Chosrau II. Parwēz." Tyche 6: 3–16.
- Altheim-Stiehl, R. (1992) "The Sasanians in Egypt – some evidence of historical interest." Bulletin de la Société d'Archéologie Copte 31: 87–96.
- MacCoull, L. S. B. (1986) "Coptic Egypt during the Persian occupation: the papyrological evidence." Studi Classici e Orientali 36: 307–13 (=MacCoull, L. S. B. (1993) Coptic Perspectives on Late Antiquity: ch. 12. Aldershot).
- Martiniani-Reber, M. (1997) Textiles et modes sassanides. Les tissus orientaux conservés au département des Antiquités égyptiennes. Paris.
- Weber, D. (1992) Ostraca, Papyri und Pergamente: Textband. Corpus Inscriptionum Iranicarum. Part III. Pahlavi Inscriptions, vol. IV. Ostraca and Papyri. Texts I. London.
- Weber, D. (2003) Berliner Papyri, Pergamente und Leinenfragmente in mittelpersischer Sprache. Corpus Inscriptionum Iranicarum, Part III: Pahlavi Inscriptions, vol. 4 (Ostraca), vol. 5 (Papyri). London.